

Doofenshmirtz Evil Incorporated

Expense Reimbursement Policy — Version 1.0

1. Purpose

This policy explains how employees get reimbursed for money spent on company business, including evil business. It exists because the CEO once expensed a volcano and Finance has not emotionally recovered.

2. Scope

This policy applies to all employees who spend their own money on behalf of Doofenshmirtz Evil Incorporated, anywhere in the Tri-State Area or beyond.

3. Eligible Expenses

3.1 Covered Items. Reimbursable expenses include inator parts, travel, client lunches, and replacement lab coats damaged by an inator that worked a little too well.

3.2 Excluded Items. Expenses that are not reimbursable include fedoras, platypus food, personal revenge projects, and anything purchased primarily to impress an ex-wife.

4. Receipts and Deadlines

4.1 Submission Deadline. Expense claims must be submitted within 30 days of purchase, with an itemized receipt. Receipts written on napkins are accepted only if signed by the vendor.

4.2 Missing Receipts. A missing receipt may be replaced by a sworn statement and a short interpretive dance performed for Finance, at Finance's discretion.

5. Approval Limits

5.1 Manager Approval. Managers may approve claims up to 500 dollars. Claims above that limit go to the CFO, who reviews them on Thursdays between naps.

5.2 Inator Purchases. Any single purchase for an inator above 2,000 dollars requires a written description of what the inator does, in one sentence, with no backstory.

6. Reimbursement Timing

Approved claims are paid with the next payroll cycle. Claims paid in doubloons, gold bars or experimental currency must be converted first.

7. Acknowledgment

Submitting an expense claim constitutes acknowledgment of this policy and a solemn promise that the volcano was a one-time thing.